Q: How to get generic LinkedList from enums? I have an enum like so : public enum AClass { Data1 = new T(), Data2 = new T(), Data3 = new T(), Data4 = new T(), Data5 = new T(), } I now want to instantiate a LinkedList from the AClass object. I tried: ICollection> list = A Class.Data2.OfType>().To

List(); But I get the following error: Type or namespace name 'AClass' could not be found (are you missing a using directive or an assembly reference?) How can I fix this? A: This is not a LinkedList, but I think you meant List: ICollection> list = AClass.Data2.OfType >().ToList(); Note this won't work if T is a non-abstract type, because you can't declare a parameterized type of the type parameter type without specifying a type for the type parameter. Risk factors for postoperative atrial fibrillation following coronary artery bypass graft surgery in Japan. We conducted a case-control study to evaluate the risk factors for postoperative atrial fibrillation (POAF) following coronary artery bypass grafting (CABG) in Japan. The study comprised a series of 1234 consecutive CABG patients over the 18 years from January 1991 to December 2008 in the five major surgical centers in Japan. Twelve hundred six patients with POAF after CABG were matched 1:3 with control patients without POAF. The most significant risk factor for POAF was preoperative presence of atrial fibrillation. High body weight was also a significant risk factor. Other risk factors, including older age, male sex, left main coronary artery stenosis, preoperative myocardial infarction, history of cerebral infarction, and anemia, were also significant. The preoperative proarrhythmic risk scores (PREOGRESS) and the European System for Cardiac Operative Risk Evaluation (EuroSCORE) were also significantly associated with POAF, but their results were considered to be an

We have previously demonstrated that mast cells are the source of thrombin-releasing activities from their granules upon activation with the calcium ionophore A23187. In addition, we showed that freshly isolated peritoneal mast cells and human leukemic cells produced and released thrombin in response to A23187. We have also shown that human leukemic cells release thrombin in response to phorbol esters that stimulate protein kinase C. These findings show that the leukemic cells can produce and release this critical protease and that phorbol esters stimulate thrombin release by a mechanism associated with activation of protein kinase C. In the last year we have made the following progress: 1) We have completed a study of mouse thrombocytopenic models of pregnancy that show a role for thrombin in the pathogenesis of abortion. Thrombin, which is stored in the platelets, plays an important role in the maintenance of pregnancy by facilitating platelet aggregation. We developed mice with a targeted disruption of the thrombin precursor gene. Mice with the null mutation exhibited reduced thrombin levels and platelet aggregation, leading to a thrombocytopenia that was reversed by the administration of thrombin fragments in an appropriate dose-response manner. At the end of pregnancy, the null mice had 1) significantly reduced placental weights, 2) lower levels of the major human chorionic gonadotropin isoform associated with pregnancy, and 3) higher levels of thrombopoietin (an hematopoietic growth factor that regulates megakaryocyte growth and differentiation), suggesting that the null mice had increased numbers of megakaryocytes. In summary, our data indicate that thrombin plays a critical role in the maintenance of pregnancy and that its deficiency leads to spontaneous abortion in mice. 2) In collaboration with Dr. Larry Noonan's laboratory at National Institutes of Health, we showed that thrombin, in addition to its procoagulant and proteolytic activities, has a direct mitogenic effect on cell types other than platelets. Thrombin stimulated the proliferation of myeloma cells, fibroblasts, vascular endothelial cells, smooth muscle cells and fibroblasts, as well as epithelial cells, whereas it inhibited colonic epithelial cells. The mitogenic effect of thrombin on cells of fibroblast-like morphology was completely abolished by its proteolysis,
